Everyone should carefully consider how their participation in whole class and group activities affects our learning community:

1. Do your contributions create learning opportunities for you and your peers?
2. Are you doing your part by asking questions, sharing ideas, and observations?
3. Are you facilitating the participation of others by active listening?

All of us are responsible for creating a safe learning community that encourages civility and respect for others, their right to learn, respect for the professionalism of the instructor, and the general goals of academic freedom. Differences of viewpoints or concerns should be expressed in terms that are supportive of the learning process, create an environment in which students and the instructor may reason with clarity and compassion, share of themselves without fear and develop an understanding of our professional community. Neither students nor the instructor should be subject to behavior that is rude, disruptive, intimidating, demeaning, or based on their perceived race, gender, color, religion, age, national origin, ethnicity, disability, or veteran status. Let's all be mindful of the contributions our behaviors make and how they match what we would like to see.
